An Important Trade.

The business men of Las Vegas must keep a look out for the trade of the Panhandle of Texas and the Staked Plains. That section is settling up with a wealthy and energetic class of stock raisers. It is a vast country and naturally tributary to this town. A little advertising, some attention and a liberal policy will bring the trade here and thus secure it when it reaches the importance which the resources of the country will justify.

At present the buffalo have been driven from the east to the extreme western border, along the Pecos. As long as there are buffalos there will be buffalo hunters, and an effort would undoubtedly make this the outfitting and supply point for the hunters, as likewise the depot for the hides they may capture. It is more convenient than any other point to the principal range. This business, as a matter of course, must cense in a few years; but trade once established in that direction, it will continue to

More Railroads SANTA FE, May 30th, 1878. Editor Las Vegas GAZETTE:

The most exciting subject in this Grande railroad, south from Alamo-Hunt, Col. Lamborn and John Pratt, raised to justify the company they structed from Alamosa to Santa Fe. within twelve months; or if a sufficient amount is not raised, they will build as far south as Santa Fe, on the Rio Grande, within that time.

Whether aid is received from this city, or not, the road will be built. If Santa Fe wants it, she must aid in paying the additional cost incurred, in leaving the short line of the Rio Grande and building up to the town and back to the river.

Such is the proposition, and the people of the town are taking hold of the subject with a will. They are subscribing liberally, and it is not doubted but the amount will be ample, to largely influence the construction of the road. It is of vital importance that the money should be raised. Without the railroad, the days of the metropolis will be numbered: with it, there is good promise of immediate and vigorous growth. This is the civil and military seat of government; here are vest mercantile interests at stake and likewise private and church property. A railroad, for Santa Fe, is the opening of a new life; without it, decay, slow but sure, will follow. This is the golden opportunity for the town. The narrow gauge extended hither, within twelve months, will not only enable our wholesale merchants to retain their present jobbing trade, but largely extend it throughout the Territory and surrounding countries. They can do this without the necessity of carrying stocks of goods worth $250,000. The bonus asked is a mere bagatelle of the benefits to be realized. When the railroad reached Denver, it had a population of 4,750 Now the inhabitants reach 20,000, and
